

Anson Road

WILLESDEN GREEN, LONDON NW2

£1,550,000

Commanding a prestigious corner plot position, this home is rich in original period detail and offers magnificent space and natural light. It boasts a wealth of highlights, including the original handmade kitchen, period tiles, parquet flooring, wall panelling, and a superb walled garden.

The striking front door leads into a double porch, with space on either side for shoes and coats. Above the door, the original fanlight and side windows allow light to pour into the hallway. From the porch, double doors open into the main hall, where you are immediately met with stunning flooring, wall panelling, and a grand fireplace. This wide central space provides access to all areas of the house.

To the front sits the first of six ground floor rooms, currently used as a dining space and capable of accommodating up to twenty guests. The room showcases another original fireplace and a bay fitted with original Crittall slim-framed windows – a feature that continues throughout the home.

To the rear of the ground floor is the formal living space, finished in rich, warm décor, with a working fireplace and a wall of original windows alongside double doors leading onto the garden. On the far side of the ground floor sits the original kitchen, now used as a breakfast room adjoining the main kitchen. It is a delight to see the 1920s handmade cabinets and glass fronted units, carefully maintained and still serving an important role in the space. The chimney breast – where an oven may once have stood – is surrounded by Dutch tiles, a nod to the Arts and Crafts era.

The main kitchen has been modernised by the current owners and opens onto a sunny conservatory with further doors to the garden and side access to the house. This space leads to an office that connects back to the main entrance hall. A guest WC completes the ground floor.
